Steal This Process to Write Your MVP Landing Page

Lianna's 6-Step, Non-Trademarked, Good Enough Framework for Writing Your Baller Landing Page

Step 1: Don't start from scratch

- Get clear on your goal
 - Interview yourself!
 - Why did you make this product? What problems are you solving?
 - Who is your ONE reader? How granular can you get?
 - The X for People Who Y... Even if/Without/Despite [Obstacle or Objection]
 - What do you want them to do on this page?
 - Aim for ONE goal (most of the time)
- Do research and review mining!
- Competitors
 - PAINS
 - DESIRES
 - ACTION DRIVERS
- What to look for: messages and sticky language
- How to organize: by popularity

Step 2: Scrappy structure

- Use this simple framework: PAS
 - Problem:
 - Agitation:
 - Solution:
- Put the pieces in logical order

- Don't forget to add social proof that supports each claim! (Or placeholders, if you'll gather reviews from users later)

Example from the course:

Spend more time selling and less time setting up your CRM

Bump is the no-frills, intuitive CRM
for teams with 5-10 SDRs

You need a CRM to manage your customers...

But every CRM out there has:

[Insert problems]

[SOCIAL PROOF TALKING ABOUT WHAT LED THEM TO SEEK OUT BUMP: HOW BAD WAS IT???)

... And those problems are costing you valuable leads

Just think about it: If each of your SDRs could close just 1 more sale every week, that's $1000s of even tens of $1000s of extra revenue your business is missing out of.

Can you even afford to keep using your crappy CRM?

[SOCIAL PROOF: HOW BAD DID IT GET? HOW MANY SALES WERE WE LOSING?]

Step 3: Draft

- Write as if you're talking to a friend
- Try several iterations of headlines
- Even better: talk to a friend (or yourself!) and transcribe the recording
- Other tips and tricks for drafting:
 - Set a timer for 1 hour and challenge yourself to finish the whole page
 - Try not to edit as you go
 - Leave room for placeholder images, graphics, etc [like so]
 - Tell ChatGPT you're me
 - (Really, if you use an LLM to get you past the blank page, that's fine! But look out for everything below, plus try to edit out the blandness that LLMs tend to present)
 - FORMAT as you draft!
 - Use H1s, H2s, section breaks, etc to help you visualize the page

Step 4: Edit

- Look for "umbrella phrases," cliches, broad claims, and lack of clarity
 - "Save time," "save money"
 - "The best X on the market" "The #1 X"
- Add specificity wherever possible
 - This is where you refer back to your research and swipes!
 - "Saves time" becomes "Slices an average of 35 min off your admin work every week"
 - "Integrates with all your other tools" becomes "Plays nice with Zoho, Quickbooks, Wave," etc
- Do the 3-foot test
- Do the Mom test

Step 5: GTFO

- Take a walk, let it breathe
- Get feedback — but don't let 1 squeaky wheel sway your whole direction
- Remember no one is going to die if your landing page is kinda awkward. Better to launch it ugly than hold onto it for another week.

Step 6: Find a designer

- Who doesn't suck
- Or use a WYSIWIG builder/template
- You're done!
